Geography of Health and Well Being

By Dr. Aakriti Grover | Dr. B. R. Ambedkar University Delhi, New Delhi

Join Learners enrolled: 82

Health is an interdisciplinary subject having an interface with many subjects such as public health, medical science, geography, anthropology, epidemiology, sociology and management that are widely taught at various universities and institutes across the country.

The unique feature of this course is that it binds the approaches of all these varied varieties of subjects and provides a holistic view to the understanding of the geography of health and wellbeing, especially at this stage when Covid-19 has disrupted human life all across the planet.

Instructor bio

Dr. Aakriti Grover

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar University Delhi, New Delhi

Dr. Aakriti Grover (World Social Science Fellow) is a trained geographer and working as Assistant Professor in the School of Global Affairs at present. Having over a decade of experience in education sector, she has taught at Central University of Tamil Nadu, and various colleges of University of Delhi including Miranda House and Swami Shraddhanand College. Her key areas of research include geography of health and wellbeing, urban environment and disaster management.

She has taught at both postgraduate and undergraduate level. She has supervised two doctoral scholars on topics related to geography of health and wellbeing.

Dr. Grover has two books from Springer Nature to her credit, titled 'Sustainable Health through Food, Nutrition and, Lifestyle' and 'Urban health and wellbeing'. She has widely published research papers (20+) in reputed peer-reviewed national and international journals and edited books.
